

Keith Hofseth is a senior economist at the Institute for Water Resources. He has been at IWR for 7 years. Mr. Hofseth started with the Corps in the Seattle district and subsequently served as the Chief Economist for the Alaska district and is a graduate of the Corps' Planners Associate Program. Mr. Hofseth holds a B.S. degree in Finance and Economics from the University of Montana and an M.A. degree in Applied Economics from Johns Hopkins University.